MicroWorld Technologies Releases MailScan For Linux

[04/05/2004]

India-based MicroWorld Technologies recently announced the beta release of its real-time anti-virus and content security software for Linux-based mail servers. This software acts as a gateway through which all ingoing and outgoing email passes, protecting Linux users not only from email-based viruses but also protecting against spam and unsolicited pornography. The software can even scan compressed attachments for viruses and block the attachment if anything suspicious is detected.

Other features include customised alert messages, heuristics scanning, and is an easy and convenient way to administrate

Those who wish to get involved in the testing process and use the software before it is commercially released as well as stand the chance to win free gifts and discounts, should download the program, carefully reading the installation instructions, and register for their evaluation key to activate the software. Users can then join the beta testers' mailing list by sending an email to linux-subscribe@mwti.net, and report any bugs, suggestions, or other relevant information to linux@mwti.net.
